

Maxwell/Hanrahan Foundation announces 2024 Awards in Craft

Five visionary artists and craftspeople receive $100,000 each in unrestricted funding

(SAN FRANCISCO — May 22, 2024) The Maxwell/Hanrahan Foundation today announced the 2024 recipients of the Maxwell/Hanrahan Awards in Craft, honoring artists and craftspeople for their profound contributions at the intersections of multidisciplinary inquiry, cultural stewardship, and innovative material practice. The five awardees will each receive $100,000 in unrestricted funding.

The Maxwell/Hanrahan Awards in Craft annually celebrates craft practitioners whose forms of expression offer rich and transformative conduits for dialogue, storytelling, and contemplation. Recognizing individuals working across a breadth of mediums, the awards are dedicated to giving artists and craftspeople the necessary resources to continue growing their practices and advancing their impact within their communities both locally and throughout their discipline, uplifting the complex, present and ever-expanding role of craft within our cultural fabric.

Through their diverse approaches, this year's awardees demonstrate the potential for cultivating new and expansive perspectives of the world through craft. Placing emphasis on the cultural and historical significance of their materials, the awardees honor lineages within their disciplines while charting paths for future generations of craftspeople. Spanning clay, glass, stone, and wood, among other media, their practices draw upon a range of artistic traditions as well as ecological, personal, and social influences, representing the multifaceted realities of contemporary craft.

- Cristina Córdova is a ceramic sculptor whose work is influenced by the rich creative heritage of the Caribbean. Using clay to give voice to regional stories and aesthetic inquiries, Córdova strives to honor and innovate within this ceramic lineage, expanding collective creative language.
- Ibrahim Said is a ceramicist whose practice recognizes the rich cultural heritage, techniques and the history of the pottery industry from his hometown of Fustat, Egypt. Combining wheel throwing, hand-building and surface adornment, including carving, glazing and finials, Said pushes the physical limits of clay while engaging, respecting and building upon a lineage of Egyptian pottery.
- Nisha Bansil is a glass sculptor, artist and educator exploring how remnants of phenomenological events found in nature relate to patterns that become ubiquitous, sacred and divine. Bansil builds devices to render invisible, natural forces, like sound waves and motion, into visual forms in glass.

- Raul De Lara is a sculptor who practices storytelling through woodworking, exploring Mexican/American iconography, queer identity and the immigrant experience. De Lara's research preserves, honors and propels forward traditional uses of wood while combining them with new developments in the global industry of woodworking.
- Thea Alvin is a stone mason and sculptor specializing in arch construction, large-scale sculptural installation, stone building, and, most recently, stained glass, building on her unique style and perspective of stonework, design, installation, team leadership and teaching in the trades.

Launched in 2022 and administered by United States Artists, the Maxwell/Hanrahan Awards in Craft were established in celebration of the groundbreaking contributions of craftspeople and artists within our cultural landscape, countering the disproportionate lack of funding for craft in the United States. The Maxwell/Hanrahan Awards in Craft are among the nation's largest awards within the field of craft, offering unrestricted and transformative opportunities for craft practitioners to further their creative visions, embark on new paths of experimentation, and continue to advance their disciplines.

Recipients of the Maxwell/Hanrahan Awards in Craft are annually selected by a rotating panel of leaders in craft, including craft practitioners, curators, educators, and others guiding the field. The panelists for the 2024 cohort were Sarah Darro, Curator and Exhibitions Director of Houston Center for Contemporary Craft; Leslie Noell, Creative Director at Penland School of Craft; Phillip Smith, Assistant Professor of Architecture at the American College of the Building Arts; and Leo Tecosky, glass blower and 2023 Maxwell/Hanrahan Award in Craft awardee.

Previous recipients of the Maxwell/Hanrahan Awards in Craft include poly-disciplinary artist Antonius-Tin Bui (2022), multimedia artist Adebunmi Gbadebo (2023), furniture maker, artist and educator Aspen Golann (2023), artist and community activist Terrol Dew Johnson (2022), and beadwork and fashion artist Jamie Okuma (2022).

ABOUT THE MAXWELL/HANRAHAN FOUNDATION AWARDS IN CRAFT

Exploration and insight require time and commitment. The Maxwell/Hanrahan Foundation Awards in Craft seek to make both possible for devoted craftspeople and artists from around the country who strive to express what we see and experience in our world through engagement with material. The award recognizes practitioners committed to material mastery and exploration with practices encompassing the stewardship of living cultural traditions, unique insight in material study, and the advancement of craft at the intersection of other fields including science. We recognize that arts funding, especially for craftspeople, is lacking in the US, and we encourage others to commit to these fields.

ABOUT UNITED STATES ARTISTS
